Wagner Law Group Expands its ERISA Team

Boston, Massachusetts-based Wagner Law Group is expanding its ERISA practice with the new hire of Nadine Bailey.

"Nadine is an outstanding and seasoned litigator with the breadth and depth of experience necessary to help expand our rapidly growing ERISA litigation practice," states managing director Marcia Wagner. The hiring of Bailey, according to a news release, is a direct response to the "sharp increase in ERISA-related litigation" and will help meet the needs of the firm's current clients.

Bailey joined Wagner Law as an associate in June 2016, according to her LinkedIn profile. She has extensive experience in class action lawsuits involving coalition of employee stock holdings in ERISA plans, insurance coverage disputes, and more. Bailey has tried, litigated, and mediated multiple cases on behalf of national corporate clients, major transportation companies, insurers, and self-insured entities. She also has experience with cases involving breach of fiduciary duty and denial of employee benefits claims under 401(k) and disability plans.

Prior to joining the Wagner Law Group, Bailey served as an associate covering commercial litigation, ERISA, employment, and construction law for nearly seven years at the Boston-based McCormack Suny law firm. She earned her Bachelor of Science degree in International Business from the University of Bridgeport.

The Wagner Law Group has continued to expand and update its team of lawyers. Just recently, Wagner promoted Stephen Wilkes to partner of the firm and before that welcomed two lawyers in April. The Wagner Law group is currently celebrating its 20th anniversary as an employee benefits law firm.
